Iran Intensifies Nuclear Work And Warnings

Additional Centrifuges Amid Israel Tension

By DAVID E. SANGER and FARNAZ FASSIHI

WASHINGTON - With the rest of the world distracted by wars in Gaza and Ukraine, Iran has moved closer than ever to the ability to produce several nuclear weapons, installing 1,400 nextgeneration centrifuges in recent weeks inside a facility buried so deep that it is all but impervious to bunker-busting bombs.

The sharp technological upgrade goes hand in hand with another worrisome change: For the first time, some members of Iran's ruling elite are dropping the country's decades-old insistence that its nuclear program is entirely for peaceful purposes. Instead, they are publicly beginning to embrace the logic of possessing the bomb, arguing that recent missile exchanges with Israel underscore the need for a far more powerful

In interviews with a dozen American, European, Iranian and Israeli officials and with outside experts, the cumulative effect of this surge appears clear: Iran has cemented its role as a "threshold" nuclear state, walking right up to the line of building a weapon without stepping over it.

American officials are divided on the question of whether Iran is preparing to take that final step or whether it will determine it is safer - and more effective - to stay just on the cusp of a weapons capability, without openly abandoning the last of its commitments as a signer of the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty.

Most officials spoke on the condition of anonymity because so much about Iran's nuclear program, from assessments of its status to secret efforts to infiltrate and slow it, is highly classified.

And they caution that while Iran could now produce the fuel for three or more bombs in days or weeks, it would still take considerable time - maybe 18 months for Iran to fabricate that fuel into a warhead that could be delivered on missiles of the kind it launched at Israel in April.

But Iran's nuclear expansion comes at the most delicate of mo-

From Abroad, China Targets Critic's Child

By STEVEN LEE MYERS and TIFFANY HSU

Deng Yuwen, a prominent Chinese writer who now lives in exile in the suburbs of Philadelphia, has regularly criticized China and its authoritarian leader, Xi Jinping. China's reaction of late has been severe, with crude and ominously personal attacks online.

A covert propaganda network linked to the country's security services has barraged not just Mr. Deng but also his teenage daughter with sexually suggestive and threatening posts on popular social media platforms, according to researchers at both Clemson University and Meta, which owns Facebook and Instagram.

The content, posted by users with fake identities, has appeared in replies to Mr. Deng's posts on X, the social platform, as well as the accounts of public schools in their community, where Mr. Deng's daughter, who is 16, has been falsely portrayed as a drug user,

A Grim Churn as Russia Floods the Front Lines

Eric Schmitt and Marc Santora

WASHINGTON — May was a particularly deadly month for the Russian army in Ukraine, with an average of more than 1,000 of or killed each day, according to U.S., British and other Western intelligence agencies.

its soldiers injured

But despite its losses, Russia is recruiting 25,000 to 30,000 new soldiers a month — roughly as many as are exiting the battlefield, U.S. officials said. That has allowed its army to keep sending wave after wave of troops at Ukrainian defenses, hoping to overwhelm them and break through the trench lines.

This article is by Julian E. Barnes, 1,000 Casualties a Day as Troops Are Rushed Into Ukraine Fight

It is a style of warfare that Russian soldiers have likened to being put into a meat grinder, with commanding officers seemingly oblivious to the fact that they are sending infantry soldiers to die

At times, this approach has proved effective, bringing the Russian army victories in Avdiivka and Bakhmut in eastern Ukraine. But Ukrainian and Western officials say the tactics were less successful this spring, as Russia tried to take land near the city of Kharkiv.

American officials said that Russia achieved a critical objective of President Vladimir V. Putin, creating a buffer zone along the border to make it more difficult for the Ukrainians to strike into the country.

But the drive did not threaten Kharkiv and was ultimately stopped by Ukrainian defenses, according to Western officials.

"President Putin and Moscow have really tried to make big gains, to break through the front lines this spring," Jens Stoltenberg, the NATO secretary general, said in an interview with The New York Times editorial board. "They tried and they

JUSTICES' RULING IMPERILS AID DEAL FOR OPIOID CRISIS

Sackler Family Loses Its Shield From Liability in Drug Epidemic

By ABBIE VANSICKLE

WASHINGTON — The Supreme Court said on Thursday that members of the Sackler family cannot be shielded from liability for civil claims related to the opioid epidemic, jeopardizing a bankruptcy plan that would have offered such protection in exchange for channeling billions of dollars toward addressing the cri-

In a 5-to-4 decision, the justices found that the deal, carefully negotiated over years with states, tribes, local governments and individuals, had broken a basic tenet of bankruptcy law by shielding members of the Sackler family from lawsuits without the consent of those who might sue.

The plan for Purdue Pharma, the maker of the prescription painkiller OxyContin, the drug widely considered to have ignited the crisis, was unusual because it offered broad protections that the Sackler family, who controlled the company, had demanded for years even as the Sacklers avoided declaring bankruptcy themselves.

"The Sacklers have not filed for bankruptcy and have not placed virtually all their assets on the table for distribution to creditors, yet they seek what essentially amounts to a discharge," Justice Neil M. Gorsuch wrote, joined by Justices Clarence Thomas, Samuel A. Alito Jr., Amy Coney Barrett and Ketanji Brown Jackson.

While he acknowledged that the decision left the plan in limbo, Justice Gorsuch wrote that the threat of future lawsuits from opioid victims, states, government entities and others might compel the Sacklers "to negotiate consensual releases on terms more favorable to opioid victims."

"If past is prologue," Justice Gorsuch wrote, citing the U.S. Trustee Office, which challenged the deal, "there may be a better deal on the horizon."

It was not immediately clear what the decision would mean for settlements involving claims of mass injury, including one involving the Boy Scouts of America and victims of sexual

In a strongly worded dissent, Justice Brett M. Kavanaugh, joined by Chief Justice John G. Roberts Jr. and Justices Sonia Sotomayor and Elena Kagan, warned of the consequences for the tens of thousands of families seeking compensation. The "decision is wrong on the law and devastating for more than 100,000 opioid victims and their families,"
